

Fabienne C. Quennet

Where 'Indians' Fear to Tread?

A Postmodern Reading of Louise Erdrich's
North Dakota Quartet

---

LIT

CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION	1
II. TRADITIONS IN CONFLICT	7
II.1. The Silko-Erdrich Controversy	7
II.2. Native vs. Mainstream American Literary and Cultural Identity	18
II.2.a. Ethnicity and Native American Aesthetics	18
II.2.b. Native American Literature: History and Oral Tradition	31
III. POSTMODERN NARRATIVE TECHNIQUES	45
III.1. Multiple Perspectives	45
III.1.a. Many Talking Heads: First-Person Narrators	45
III.1.b. Gossiping Community: The First-Person Plural Narrator	60
III.2. Intertextuality	72
IV. POSTMODERN CONCEPTS IN THE NORTH DAKOTA QUARTET	85
IV.1. Love Medicine (1984, rpt. 1993)	85
IV.1.a. Magical Realism	85
IV.1.b. Carnavalesque Humor	99
IV.2. The Beet Queen (1986)	111
IV.2.a. The Reader and the Text	111
IV.2.b. Gender Roles and Sexual Identities	131
IV.3. Tracks (1988)	144
IV.3.a. History as Text--Text as History	144
IV.3.b. The Trickster Figure	172
IV.4. The Bingo Palace (1994)	195
IV.4. Games and Chance	195
V. CONCLUSION	217
BIBLIOGRAPHY	219